

Le temps présent
Pascal Grimaud

Laurent Sébastien Fournier, Jean-Pierre Le Goff

Pascal Grimaud upsets and undermines these reassuring platitudes. Leaving the marked trails, it borrows paths cross and we did see a very different part of Provence and its villages. Her photos are like a mirror image photos of a region devoted to holidays and leisure for tourists and passing people do not stay long and did not really know those who live and work there year round. Conversely postcard villages, beautiful landscapes, the presence and life of the inhabitants do not erase a feeling of emptiness and dull anguish emanating from many of his photos: streets, squares, crossroads are deserted; village houses are for sale, with dirty or other bright colors are being built; bitumen is spread everywhere; a road leads to a dirt road in the middle of wasteland ... These images contrast with the beauty of buildings and farms watches still surrounded by cultivated land, coiled in a domesticated nature and that harmonize with it.
